Sustaining Grantee Spotlight: Alliance to Mobilize Our Resistance

by Eva King

AMOR (Alliance to Mobilize Our Resistance) is an alliance of community-based grassroots organizations mobilizing at the intersections of race, class, gender, sexual orientation, and immigration status to prevent, to respond to, and to end state violence against their community. They are in Providence, Rhode Island, and work to create a space where the community can demand accountability, challenge injustices, and access healing after experiencing violence.

Catarina Lorenza moved from Guatemala 9 years ago to Providence and loved the small city, great food, the people, and the culture. She founded AMOR in 2017 when she identified a need to place sovereignty back into the hands of the communities directly affected by systemic oppression and to build leadership, generate power, create sustainability, and organize resistance with and alongside all directly affected peoples.

AMOR is working across several issues including transportation rights, community building, and legal counsel. In transportation, they have been advocating for a bill which would allow undocumented residents to obtain a driver's license. They also assist residents with transportation to court or jail to visit family or lawyers. AMOR also works with issues around language justice and can translate and refer community members who need medical, physical, or mental health support to providers who can help.

Director's Corner

Maintaining our Vigilance

The system isn't broken, it is wildly successful – for those it supports. Concepts of inequality and racism that disparage many, do so as they support and bolster others. This occurs through an intentional intersection of racism, classism, and other pervasive systems of oppression that exploit our differences in gender, language, nationality, culture, sexuality, and ability to keep us locked in this scheme of extractive injustice.

Racism was schematically produced, and whether it is knowingly or not we all maintain it; even those who endure the dredges of its impacts. It is maintained through lies fed to us that deemphasize the effects of bigotry and rob us of a systemic analysis of race and a shared language. It is perpetuated through the fallacy of color blindness, intentional miseducation, and the censorship of books, literature, and educational subject matter. It is reinforced by harmful myths that call for us to “pull ourselves up by our bootstraps”, normalizing the ever-expanding wealth gap and promoting the lie of meritocracy.

Knowledge is key. Obtaining an understanding of how the systems of oppression impact each one of us provides us with essential information and opportunity to create change.

AMOR believes in the power of bringing people together to build community and support. Building trust is hard and takes lots of time. Bringing people together who may share a similar culture or background can be a powerful tool to build relationships. Before the pandemic, they were hosting events and will continue to do so once it is safe.

AMOR is also a fierce advocate for immigrant rights. They have been hosting weekly consultations with lawyers, and Know Your Rights workshops regarding topics such as asylum, deportation, and access to benefits. They have also been working on a campaign to shut down the ICE detention center in Rhode Island.

Urgent Response Grantee Spotlight: Justice 4 Housing

by Eva King

Leslie Credle is the Executive Director and Founder of Justice 4 Housing. As a formerly incarcerated woman, she became an advocate for stopping the revolving door within our prison system. While conducting a listening tour, she interviewed 100 formerly incarcerated women; they asked, what was the #1 contributor to their incarceration and what was the #1 barrier upon reentry; housing and employment were the #1 and #2 responses, in that order. Leslie explained how, "stable housing is the key to a successful reentry. Without a stable home you are more likely to recidivate." To address this need, she founded Justice 4 Housing.

of discriminatory federal, state, and local housing policies. They address the root causes of recidivism in correlation to homelessness, delivering holistic and community-based solutions.

Justice 4 Housing does direct service work through community-based programs that support individuals who have been involved in the justice system, as well as through policy change. Their work centers around breaking down systemic barriers that destabilize communities and restrict access to private and public housing. In April 2022 they are kicking off their Far from Home campaign and will share a report they have been working on. The report proposes policy solutions to help overcome systemic discrimination against applicants who have had contact with the justice system and mitigate the ripple effects of lack of housing opportunities.

Donor Testimony

"It's deeply moving to see the way Haymarket is transforming the power dynamics of the economy...I grew up in Western Massachusetts, in the same town where my family came as early colonizers in the 1700's and started a paper company. After generations of that money getting passed down I'm working on redistributing what I have access to, and hopefully in that process shift how my family engages with "wealth" (at least the future generations, fingers crossed!).

The way that you all invest in communities is an example I can point to when I'm trying to express the kind of world I want to live in. "

-Robin Bean Crane, Haymarket Donor

In Remembrance of Our Haymarket Community

As an organization Haymarket is entirely dependent on every member of our community, without the people of Haymarket, we could not exist. Whether they are a current or past member of staff or the funding panel; a grantee or part of the board of directors everyone who has joined us in the work of anti-racist organizing over the years has contributed to where we stand today and we honor their work and commitment.

We acknowledge that this memorial does not represent every member of our community that we have lost in recent times and we wish to honor those who are not represented here as well as those who are. We would like to uplift the lives of several of our community members who we lost this year and express our deepest gratitude for their contributions to the Haymarket community and the movement for justice.

Jean Entine
May 21, 1942 - May 17, 2022

The idea for what became Jean Entine's most significant social justice legacy emerged during early 1980s discussions she and a group of women held in a Cambridge bookstore, where they appraised the growing political clout of the women's movement.

"As it was portrayed in the press, we saw the movement as too white and too middle class for us," she recalled in a 1998 Boston Globe interview. "We were more interested in the women's movement that existed in the neighborhoods of any city, and the women who were doing the work that was unrecognized and not considered part of it."

She noted that “because of discrimination in our society, it’s been hardest for women of color to get access to certain kinds of donors and to feel empowered to go into their community and ask for support.”

Ms. Entine grew up in the South as a white woman of privilege and ended up living in Cambridge, where she became an early ally for women of color — a founder of the Boston Women’s Fund and a tireless advocate for women of color gaining access to leadership roles.

She was 79 when she died May 17 in her Cambridge home of complications from hypertension and cerebral amyloid angiopathy. Read Full Obituary.

Unpacking the truth about the rationale, and the schematic arrangement of a construct invented to conquer and divide provides enlightenment. With this knowledge, along with a shared language, there is significant potential to seek a manner to undo the very nature of this systemic arrangement.

Hope is not lost. We have the ability to exercise our vigilance to disrupt and eradicate an arrangement that benefits few and challenges a larger majority of the community. It is possible to apply our values and principles to the process of community organizing. When your beliefs are inclusive of others, possess a willingness to be transparent, center those who are most impacted, and have a strategy complete with a plan and timeline – there is the potential for change. Coming together with others to organize toward change, can create a groundswell of potential.

Haymarket's phenomenal grantees understand that social constructs can be tackled through their community organizing efforts, and many have milestones and victories to show their progress and achievements. By developing an understanding or analysis of this systemic arrangement it is possible to grasp the reality of our circumstances. Together we can maintain our diligence and continue to build the future we know is possible. See our "Grantee Spotlights" for more information.
